

4.1.3 Children's language development

Students should explore how children develop their spoken and written skills. To achieve this, students should study:

- the functions of children's language
- phonological, pragmatic, lexical, semantic and grammatical development
- different genres of speech and writing
- different modes of communication (spoken, written, multimodal)
- theories and research about language development.