

4.2 Transport over larger distances

Larger organisms need systems to transport solids, liquids and gases over larger distances. These systems and processes are monitored and controlled by the human body, but this delicate balance can be disrupted. The topic moves from simple to complex, and outlines the challenges that this presents for any transport system in plants and animals.