

3.5.2 Theoretical perspectives on gender

Content	Guidance notes
Theoretical perspectives on gender and representation and feminist approaches.	An exploration of the distinction between essentialist views (that males and females are different categories with essential features, behaviours and attributes that define them) and social constructionalist views that the same features, behaviours and attributes are constructed by society (including the media) and not by nature.