Film: Shang-Chi and the Legend of the Ten Rings (2021) and Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs (1937)

Film must be studied in relation to media industries only, including the economic contexts of the film industry. Learners need to study the set films in relation to all the subject content bullet points listed under the 'media industries' topic in the subject content table at the end of this component.

Shang-Chi and the Legend of the Ten Rings (2021) is part of the Marvel franchise which has dominated contemporary popular cinema and global box offices for over a decade and grossed more than $25 billion. It offers the opportunity to explore the importance of patterns of media ownership and how they have contributed to Disney's success as a global media conglomerate. The film has a clear pattern of production, distribution and circulation and is a production from a major studio.

Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs (1937) is a historically significant media product and was amongst the first films to be selected for preservation in the National Film Registry by the Library of Congress in recognition of it being culturally, historically or aesthetically significant. It was the first feature film produced by Disney and was crucial in its emergence as a major film studio. The film exemplifies patterns of distribution and exhibition and the significance of the development of home entertainment media.

Providing both films for the focus of an industry study will allow learners to consider how the film industry has changed from 1937 to present day in relation to how both set films were produced, distributed and circulated, including considerations of technological change, regulation and the significance of patterns of ownership and economic factors.

Extracts of both films may only be considered in relation to the media industry issues exemplified. Textual analysis is not a requirement of the study or assessment of Film as a media form.

Theories of media industries do not need to be studied.

Radio: The BBC Radio One Breakfast Show

Radio must be studied in relation to media industries and media audiences, including a consideration of the economic, political and cultural contexts that influence the radio industry and its audiences.

The BBC Radio One Breakfast Show is currently the most listened to 'show' on BBC Radio One and forms part of BBC Radio One's overall public service broadcasting (PSB) remit to 'entertain, educate and inform' and is required to demonstrate a 'distinctive' output of content compared to commercial radio.

Learners must study one complete episode of The BBC Radio One Breakfast Show, from September 2017 onwards, chosen by the centre. Learners need to study the set radio product in relation to all the subject content bullet points listed under the 'media industries' and 'media audiences' topics in the subject content table at the end of this component. The selected radio programme should be a standard episode (not a feature or on location episode) and include a range of British music and content promoting British music, celebrity interviews, news items and quizzes/games. It is the teacher's responsibility to ensure the content selected is appropriate to their learners.

Theories of media industries and audiences do not need to be studied.

Learners should consider the significance of public service broadcasting and how The BBC Radio One Breakfast Show fits into the overarching ethos of 'informing, educating and entertaining', including consideration of the 'distinctiveness' of the content of the programme compared to commercial breakfast shows and which audience(s) are being targeted and why. The influence of funding should also be considered in relation to content, production, marketing and distribution and there should also be a consideration of technology, for example, the use of technology to distribute the show across a number of platforms other than 'traditional' radio.

Video Games: Animal Crossing: New Horizons (2020)

Video games must be studied in relation to media industries and media audiences, including a consideration of the economic and social contexts that influence the video game industry.

Animal Crossing: New Horizons (2020) is a global media product produced by the Japanese multi-national Nintendo allowing for the study of media ownership in a global context. It is one of the best-selling video games of all time and is part of an established franchise.

Learners must study the set video game product in relation to all the subject content bullet points listed under the 'media industries' and 'media audiences' topics in the subject content table at the end of this component.

Theories of media industries and media audiences do not need to be studied.

Learners should consider the elements of the theoretical framework for media industries and audiences and examine how the producers of Animal Crossing: New Horizons have engaged with and constructed their audience and examine issues of ownership and the influence of technology on production and distribution.

Extracts of the video game should only be considered in relation to the media industry and audience issues exemplified.
