

Topic 3: Music for the screen

Musical interpretation of dialogue and action (both specific and general) through melodic and harmonic, rhythmic and structural means, instrumental writing (including timbres and textures), and (where appropriate) use of technology

Prescribed repertoire

Related repertoire

Erich Korngold, The Adventures of Robin Hood (1938)

Early film scores by mainstream composers in the post-Mahlerian tradition

Bernard Herrmann, Vertigo (1958)

Film scores that explore increasing integration between music and the accompanying dramatic action

Philip Glass, The Hours (2003)

Works that demonstrate modern adaptations of composing techniques (e.g. leitmotif, minimalist procedures) to film scores