

4.4 Waves

This section provides knowledge and understanding of wave properties, electromagnetic waves, superposition and stationary waves. The wavelength of visible light is too small to be measured directly using a ruler. However, superposition experiments can be done in the laboratory to determine wavelength of visible light using a laser and a double slit.

There are opportunities to discuss how the double-slit experiment demonstrated the wave-like behaviour of light (HSW7).