

3 Practices that shape and express religious identity	3.1	Orthodox a) Various meanings and interpretations of Orthodoxy; written and oral Torahs are divinely inspired, with an emphasis of living according to Halakhah. b) Status of revelation compared to theology. Debates about a literal view of the Torah or as a source for a Jewish philosophy of history. c) Place of the Temple; distinctive practices in synagogues and daily religious observances. With reference to the ideas of B Brown and G Robinson.
	3.2	Reform a) Significance of beliefs and practices changing over time; reform views about revelation; significant changes to synagogue services and different emphases in religious observances, including gender issues. b) Influence of Haskalah (enlightenment and rationalism). c) Different types of Reform in Germany compared to more radical movements in America and in Jerusalem. With reference to the ideas of M Meyer and D E Kaplan.
